3. Reply embossed finish specificities

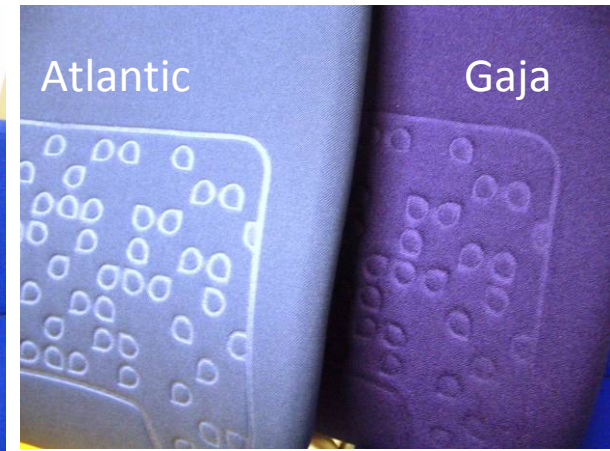

As each fabric is different (composition, surface, thickness etc.) the result of the embossing process is different too. The level of definition of the pattern differs from one fabric to the other.

a. Natural fibers versus Polyester:

As the electro welding process is achieved through the heating and melting of the fabric components in order to emboss a shape, and as polymers are more reactive to heat than natural fibers, the look of the pattern will be different from one fabric to the other.

Ex: for Gaja and Fame, made out of wool, the patterns will be slightly less defined and precise than with Atlantic, a 100% Polyester fabric.

b. The leather special case:

For leather, the specific pattern associated is a simple horizontal line, stitched, to visually separate the back and the lumbar areas.

c. Each pattern is unique:

As there are differences in the pattern look from one fabric to another, we can observe differences of pattern definition depending on the pattern's design itself, width and distance between each shape composing the pattern.
